Finding the cause of the problem

Thorough investigation of the problem must take place in order to locate its source. (Inexperience can lead to incorrect diagnosis, which results in treating symptoms rather than the source.)

The experienced operator will detect the source and advise the most appropriate waterproofing solution.

In the example below water leakage through a crack in the concrete ceiling was wetting the carpet. The cause came from the balcony above. The screed under the tiles was permanently wet, with water finding a flaw in the concrete slab. The solution was to 'Microl 2000 membrane' the slab surface, prior to laying new tiles.
